

Office of Indiana
State Chemist
County Survey

A map of Indiana showing its 92 counties. Each county is labeled with its name. Symbols are placed within the counties to represent different land uses: yellow circles for agriculture, yellow triangles for forests, green stars for parks, blue diamonds for urban areas, and black crosses for water bodies. The symbols are distributed across the state, with agriculture and forests being the most common. Parks are concentrated in the central and northern parts of the state, while urban areas are found in major metropolitan regions. Water bodies are represented by black crosses in counties like Huntington and Johnson.